Previously, the 1972 ABM treaty had been construed by the United States as limiting testing and development of anti-ballistic missile systems based on exotic technologies such as lasers and directed energy weapons. Many elements of Mr. Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative are based on such technology.

A new Pentagon legal study argued that the Soviet negotiators in 1969-72 never accepted the limits on exotic technology and therefore the United States was not bound to do so. This position, which had not yet been formally accepted within the administration, was unexpectedly made public by Mr. McFarlane on Oct. 6 and affirmed as administration policy in a briefing two days later.

The White House meeting took place Friday as Mr. Shultz pre-pared to speak Monday to a San Francisco meeting of legislators from North Atlantic Treaty Orga-nization countries. Mr. Shultz also was preparing to fly from San foreign ministers, who were showing signs of dismay about the new ABM stance. As a result of the meeting, Mr. Shuliz was able to tell both groups that Mr. Reagan had decided to continue to conduct the Strategic Defense Initiative program "in accordance with a restrictive interpretation" of the ABM treaty even though the administration believed that the new interpretation was "fully justified."

UN Assembly Rejects Arab Attempt to Oust Israel

New York Times Service UNITED NATIONS - The General Assembly has rejected an attempt by 18 Arab delegations to challenge Israel's seat in the 159nation body. All the Arab members, except Egypt, Jordan and Oman, cosponsored the challenge

Wednesday. The move to oust Israel from the General Assembly has become an annual effort since it was first tried by Libya four years ago, but the effort had been all but abandoned by Arab countries because of lack of support by member nations.

The challenge sponsored Wednesday, which followed a decision last week at a meeting of the 21-member "Arab group," was an attempt to prevent Iran from introducing the issue as it has for the last three years. Iran has persistently attacked Arab resicence to challenge Israel as "un-Islamic" behav-

St. Lawrence Seaway Still Blocked

THOROLD, Canada (AP) — Officials with the St. Lawrence Seaway said Thursday it would take a week to estimate how long a collapsed lock would keep the waterway closed. The closure has forced shipping compa: nies to dock more than 60 ships and lay off workers.

A spokesman for the Seaway Authority said work began Thursday to build a structure to stabilize a weakened wall and allow closer inspection of the damage. A 125-foot (38-meter) section of the lock's concrete wall caved in Monday, halting traffic in both directions.

Eight ships were in the canal Thursday, 20 were at anchor in Lake Ontario and seven were waiting in Lake Erie to enter the canal. About 30 ships were docked along the seaway. Idling the vessels costs an estimated $10,000 to $20,000 per ship each day.

Democrats Unveil Plan on U.S. Trade

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democrats in the House of Representatives unveiled wide-ranging recommendations Thursday to close the $150-billion trade deficit of the United States by cutting the value of the dollar and beefing up exports.

The plan, put together by the House Democratic Trade Task Force, stopped short of calling for retaliatory tariffs and quotas, an issue that has split the party. Representative Bill Alexander, a Democrat of Arkansas, said the package would block U.S. participation in any new round of world trade talks until international negotiators attacked the problem of the dollar. He called the plan "an alternative to protectionism."

The outline also calls for $500 million in export financing, which is The outline also calls for $500 million in export financing, which is $200 million above the Reagan administration plan, as well as streamlining of export controls, stepped up action against unfair trade practices abroad and a reshaping of aid to those left jobless by the current surge in imports. The Democrats also said that they "support achieving a balanced budget within five years to remove some of the pressure on interest rates and help moderate the value of the dollar."

Hondurans Block U.S. "Contra' Aid

The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras -Duarle The Honduran government has seized the first shipment of U.S. numanitarian aid intended for rebels trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government, according to iews reports here.

Foreign Minister Edgardo Paz Barnica said the shipment had arrived in Honduras without the government's knowledge and an ur-gent meeting of the country's National Security Council would be called to discuss the incident. He did not say when the meeting would be held, and did not comment on a newspaper report that the cargo had been seized.

Honderas is a close U.S. ally, and has allowed extensive military naneuvers by U.S. troops to take place on its territory. But it appeared to be leery about playing a direct role in the delivery of aid to andinist government.

"This is a very delicate matter," Mr. Paz Barnica said at a news conference. "This cargo effectively hard the government of Honduras."

The supplies, purchased with part of the $27 million in humaniby the U.S. Congress, arrived late last week at Toncontin airport in Tegucigalpa.

A Tegucigalpa newspaper, El Heraldo, reported Wednesday that the shipment had been seized and wif was being held at an armed forces center near the capital.

El Heraldo quoted the com-mander-in-chief of the armed forces, General Walter Lopez Reyes, as saying, "Our country cannot, under any circumstances, allow this type of operation, which tends to inflict serious moral damage to the Honduran nation."

The general said that 14 tons of forms being sent to the guernillas were seized when a DC-6 transport plane landed in Tegucigalpa.

In the Wake of Achille Lauro

Egypt and Italy are caught in the turbulent wake of the Achille Lauro affair. This is, in any long-range scheme of things, a matter for keen regret. As Americans move beyond their anger at seeing the two countries do less than they could have to apprehend the killers, a concern for their political health comes to the fore. As Egyptians see it, Cairo could have taken political cover and turned the ship away, as others did; but to save lives and do a service it took the ship in. Having gone that far, it became politically unthinkable to hand over Arab perpetrators to non-Arab prosecutors. President Hosni Mubarak has incurred sub-stantial costs as well as gains for having stuck in his fashion with his predecessor's openings to the United States and Israel, despite the continuing impasse on the Palestinian issue, which is critical to him. He should not have dismissed President Ronald Reagan's explanatory letter and demanded an apology, which was almost guaranteed to produce Mr. Reagan's terse "never." Still, it is possible to think. as we do, that Mr. Reagan was right to intercept the Egyptian airliner, and to understand the measure of humiliation and increased vulnerability that it brought upon an already frustrated Arab friend.

For Italy, the political repercussions to date have been more severe. The government has been forced to resign after a severe governmental crisis, apparently the first since the war to spring from a foreign-policy issue — an issue bearing directly on links with Italy's principal ally. Before the government resigned. Giovanni Spudolini, the defense minister, took his Republican party out of Prime Minister Bettino Craxi's five-party coalition, complain-ing that he had not been consulted in the release of the fifth man. This is true. Mr. Spadolini is a known opponent of the pro-Arab tilt that produced the release. He believes that in the release certain legal and political obligations to the United States were ignored. The Reagan administration concurs with Mr. Spadolini on this point.

But again, it is possible to think, as we do, that Mr. Reagan was right to reach for the fifth man, and to appreciate that Mr. Craxi has been an exemplary ally, one especially admired by a conservative American administration for his stands on defense.

The distressing fallout leads some to conclude that had the results been properly anticipated, the actions precipitating them might have been avoided. But the actions were not accidental: they reflected logical though not unchallengeable political choices. Egypt and Italy did what they felt they had to do. So did the United States. They are all adult governments, and now they must deal with the consequences. They should do this in knowing respect for the importance of their bonds.

A Hanging in South Africa

Benjamin Moloise, a 30-year-old black South African, is scheduled to be hanged in Pretoria today. He has been described in news impose capital punishment — Americans do not occupy the high moral ground. In cases such as this, in fact, the United accounts in America as a poet and as a political prisoner, but he is not about to be executed because of his writings or his opposition to the government. The penalty has been imposed because he has been tried and found guilty of killing a black policeman.

Many governments, including the government of the United States, have joined in international appeals for elemency. The UN Security Council even adopted a resolution urging South African authorities not to carry out the sentence, and on Wednesday the State Department affirmed its opposition.

The United States would have been in a better position to make this case, however, if the sentence had been given because of Mr. Moloise's publications or political activity, since America does not penalize either with capital punishment. But when the offense is the murder of a police officer — a crime for which many states in the United States would

States stands squarely with South Africa and the Soviet Union, the only large, white-ruled nations that allow capital punishment.

The imposition of this ultimate penalty on Mr. Moloise is deplorable, but so is the sanctioned killing of dozens of Americans for similar offenses. The South Africans executed 115 convicted criminals last year; the United States has more than 1,500 on death row. Executions are occurring in the United States with such regularity that they no longer command sustained interest or provoke the outrage that they should. The hanging in Pretoria must be protested. but so should the execution in Florida, the lethal injection in Texas and the firing squad in Utah. Government-sanctioned killing for violations of the law, no matter how vile the crimes of those on death row, is no more conscionable in America than anywhere else.

Mixed Messages on 'Star Wars'

Secretary of State George P. Shultz is struggling manfully to repair the damage done by reckless administration statements suggesting that the United States is prepared to scrap the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty rather than accept meaningful constraints on President Ronald Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative. He may be fighting a losing battle.

The ABM treaty does not proscribe research and development work on anti-ballistic missile defense systems. Both the United States and the Soviet Union were in fact pursuing largescale ABM research long before Mr. Reagan announced his "star wars" program.

With those continuing programs, there would be a case for renegotiating the ABM treaty - to draw a line between allowable and non-allowable development and testing even without Mr. Reagan's "star wars" speech in 1983. But careful renegotiation is one thing and reckless destruction quite another.

Supposedly the current SDI program is aimed only at providing an answer to the legitimate question of whether an effective defense system is technologically feasible. The administration, however, has caused trouble for itself by seeming to prejudge the answer.

That pro-SDI zealotry has aroused suspicions - adroitly fanned by Moscow - that Washington is prepared to tear up the ABM treaty. That impression was seemingly confirmed by a television interview in which the national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, gave a broad interpretation of what is allowed under the treaty. As he explained it, the ABM pact allows research, development and testing of "new physical concepts . . . Only deployment is foreclosed."

That was a shocking statement for several reasons. First and foremost, the ABM treaty is worth saving. Beyond this, Mr. McFarlane's broad interpretation alarmed America's European friends, provided a windfall to the Soviet campaign to split the United States from its allies, and put the onus on Washington for any breakdown in arms-control talks in Geneva. Mr. Shultz fought an inside battle to repair the damage. Apparently he scored a partial victory. He made two speeches this week as-serting that, while the administration considers the broader interpretation of the ABM narrower, more generally accepted interpretations in practice. That helps. But the erratic spokesmanship leaves the administration's actual intentions open to question. As some congressional critics point out, the hair-splitting in fact gives the Soviet Union, already accused of bending or breaking the ABM treaty, an excuse to go further without incurring international wrath. - Los Angeles Times.

Ethiopia: Another Pol Pot Rule?

The 11-year-old dictatorship in Ethiopia is more responsible than any other agency, human or meteorological, for the tragedy that afflicts Ethiopia. Unfortunately the unsavory nature of the Ethiopian regime, and the endless evidence of its crimes against the Ethiopian people, is ignored by most Western govern-ments and charitable agencies whose humanitarian instincts towards the famine are being ruthlessly exploited in Addis Ababa. Resettlement has been used openly as a weapon in the civil war between the regime and the Tigre peoples. If we start assessing Colonel Mengistu as an African Pol Pot, it might alert more people to the enormity and criminality of what is going on in Ethiopia behind the televi-sion pictures of starving children.

Transport for the resettlement program is provided by the Soviet Union. Soviet assis-tance also helps the Dergue, the ruling military council, pursue a major offensive in the north. That explains why dock space priority is always given to Soviet ships carrying arms, leaving Western grain ships to idle off shore to the point where the grain has decayed too far for it to be worth trucking inland.

1910: U.S. Soldiers to Get New Look WASHINGTON --- A radical if not revolutionary change in the uniforming of soldiers has been decided upon by the War Department. Under the new plan the soldier's entire load will be placed on his back, permitting him free use of the arms and hands in handling a gun. Even the bayonet will be on the back. The soldier's blanket and other equipment will be rolled up on his back, so that he can sleep without much discomfort, even in full equipment. The blouse will also be replaced by sweaters. The sweaters will not be of the athlet ic kind, but more like jerseys, buttoning up the front with dull buttons. The long overcoat is also to give way to a short pea jacket. It is believed this will give soldiers more free movement in the use of their legs. The new uniforms will be in service before winter is over.

1935: France Recalls Madagascar PARIS - France is commemorating the 40th anniversary of the conquest of Madagascar. In 1890, Britain, in return for concessions in Zanzibar, had consented to recognize a French protectorate over Madagascar, but [Madagascar] refused to make concessions. In 1894, France addressed an ultimatum to the sovereign, demanding powers that would make French authority supreme in the land. The demands were refused. A French force landed. General Duchesne and his men, who had looked forward to a rapid campaign, found themselves transformed into road builders. Thousands of soldiers died of disease. Two months later). Duchesne mounted his men on mules and within twenty days stood overlooking Tananarive. Shells were thrown into the capital, which surrendered [on Sept. 30, 1895].

Myth of PLO Moderation Is Exploded

single terrorist incident created such international commotion. The Achille Lauro affair has produced anger between Egypt and the United States, strains between the United States and Italy, a convulsion in Italy's ruling coalition followed by the government's resignation, antigovernment riots in Egypt, and can-cellation of a breakthrough meeting of the British foreign minister with the Palestine Liberation Organization. Even the General Assembly, under heavy U.S. pressure, tabled a planned invitation to Yasser Arafat.

The diplomatic din you hear is the sound of a myth exploding. The myth is PLO moderation, its vaunted turn from terror to diplomacy.

On this assumption has been built the Middle East policies (its center-piece: engaging the PLO in the "peace process") of Egypt, Italy, Brit-sin, and increasingly, the United States. Policies, alliances, even goveruments are now being rearranged not because of individual blunders or lies, but because of the logic of the situation: After the Achille Lauro, to talk of a new, moderate, post-terror PLO is to risk ridicule.

To avoid the risk, the British goverament took the precaution of asking the PLO delegation it was to meet with in London to sign a statement renouncing terror and recognizing Is-rael. But the PLO refused and Britain called off the meeting.

Not everyone decided to bend before the facts. Italy decided to send the facts to Yugoslavia. At the first available moment, it released Mohammed Abbas, the "notorious Palestinian terrorist" (the White House's mer imperial powers to puff itself up ers' getaway plane that the States diverted to Italy.

With Mr. Abbas, the PLO double game — commit terror, talk peace — Arafat as an "intermediary" between criminal whom Italy was treaty-civilization and the Achille Lauro hi-jacker-murderers. Mr. Abbas turns for Mr. Andreotti and Prime Minisout, in fact, to be the man who sent the hijackers. He turns out further to be neither a freelancer, nor a PLO renegade, nor head of a PLO "offshoot," as the chronically apologetic Western press speculated for as long as it could. He is a top Arafat aide, a loyalist whom Mr. Arafat himself placed on the PLO's highest body, its -man executive committee.

Why did Italy let him go? Incom-prehensible, said the White House.

Theory and fact collided aboard the Achille Lauro, and Italy chose theory.

Ever mindful of alliance sensibilities, the administration was being kind. It is entirely comprehensible.

The first consideration is fear. Af-ter a 1973 PLO attack on a Pan Am airliner at Rome airport, foreign min-ister Giulio Andreotti, who was then prime minister, worked out a deal with the PLO: Italy agrees not to get in the way of the PLO, and the PLO finds non-Italian targets for its terror. A more grandiose but no less cynical consideration is Italy's diplomatic amour-propre. A pro-PLO policy to win the favor of the Arab states was the cornerstone of Mr. Andreotti's Med-politik. This policy not only guarantees Italy access to oil but allows one of the weakest of the for-Abyssinia, but it's something. That peasement — for example, acquiescis up. Here is the man sent by Yasser ing to Arab demands for releasing a bound to America to hold for at least 45 days — is an inconvenient, appar-ter Craxi a kind of cognitive necessi-ty. Their entire Middle East policy is built on the assumption that the PLO has turned moderate. Mr. Abbas and his association with Mr. Arafat, sure to come out at any trial - is its refutation. Theory and fact collided aboard the Achille Lauro. Italy, not for the first time, chose theory.

The facts, after all, are intolerable. Mr. Abbas's group issued a communique in Cyprus explaining that its men had really planned to land at "Ashdod-harbor in occupied Palestine" to attack "military targets." Now, Ashdod is not on the West Bank or Gaza. It is within pre-1967 Israel, the Israel that Andreotti & Co. insist the PLO is ready to accept. If Ashdod is "occupied," then all of Israel is occupied.

As for "military targets," Israelis are painfully familiar with Mr. Abbas's so-called targets.

In its most successful raid, his group kidnapped a family in Nahariya, shot the father and dashed the head of his daughter, aged 5, against a rock. The man who did this was at the top of the list of 50 "fighters" the Achille Lauro hijackers demanded released from Israeli jails.

As if to confirm the point, on the very day the U.S. Navy intercepted the hijackers' getaway plane, a boo-by-trapped soft drink bottle exploded in a café in Tel Aviv. In Tunis, the PLO took credit for the blast. On the Achille Lauro, one man was

America's Democratic Showcase in Grenada Shows Signs of Rot

N EW YORK — Two years after the Grenada invasion, the last of the Green Bereis have moved out. The last American flags and bunting have gone from the cricket field where Vice President George Bush once spoke to crowds of cheering schoolchildren. And the democratic government that was left behind may be on the verge of disintegrating.

When the official annals of the Reagan years are written, Grenada will figure prominently. The U.S.-led invasion of the island was a resounding success for the sort of symbolic politics the administration holds dear. The action was swift, decisive and telegenic. Investors want elections, security, in-frastructure: we will give all three."

The problem is that politics operate more on the level of local reality than global spectacle. It is never easy for small, underdeveloped societies to wear the symbolic mantle that larger powers want to them to wear. Grenadians first suffered the long years of brutal and eccentric rule under Sir Eric Gairy, then the disintegration of a once-popular revolutionary regime. Such a society may be poorly equipped to play the role assigned to it. But it may be led to think of its own future in the most apocalyptic terms. # Protectionist Measures Sour the World Sugar Market

LONDON — There is no crop in the world more political than sugar. There is no free market. Everybody has a deal, often with an outside protector. The Cuban economy leans heavily on the over-the-market prices paid by the Soviet Union. The Caribbean and African countries similarly depend on special favors granted by the European Community. For long enough a number of Caribbean and Central American countries have relied on preferential access to the United States.

But over the last few years these "sugar-daddy" arrangements have come to mean less as the big trading blocks - the United States, the EC and have increased protection and subsidies for their own sugar farmers and as some Third World producers, like Brazil and Argentina, have gone into the subsidy business themselves.

According to the London-based International Sugar Organization, prices are "in real terms quite possibly the lowest ever." It is cheaper for many countries to burn sugarcane rather than harvest it. Over the last 25 years, prices in most years have been depressed, often below the cost of production of even the most efficient producers. Despite this world output has doubled since 1960.

Ten Central American and Caribbean nations recently formed a "Sugar Group" to persuade the United States to halt the closing up of its sugar marketplace. Meanwhile, Third World producers are gearing up for a big battle with the EC when its sugar regime is due for renewal next year. The EC has been the greatest sinner in the sugar marketplace. In the United States and Japan protectionist measures have kept in being industries which would otherwise have gone into decline. In Europe the sugar support system has actually lion a year. Sugar production expanded from 9 million tons in 1970 to a record high of 15 million tons in 1982. This amounted to an addition of over percent to world production capacity.

Euphoria dominated the sugar market in 1973. and 1974 when there was a boom in prices. There was a widespread feeling that sugar was entering a new period of short supply in the face of growing demand. Aid agencies poured in money to help developing countries expand their production However, the world recession, changing dietary habits and the development of sugar substitutes soon combined to puncture that euphoria

This depression in sugar prices has compelled the EC to adjust its policies. During the 1980s it has been willing to carry higher stocks and it has engineered a cut in production. The United States, however, reacted by becoming more protectionist. It introduced import quotas in 1982 and then later sharply reduced the size of these quotas. In the last three years U.S. levels of support for domestic sugar producers have risen to virtually the same as those in the EC. At present, this is the most significant factor depressing the world sugar mar-ket. No wonder that the Caribbean and Central American nations are screaming. They are losing more from their loss of the U.S. sugar market than they are gaining from America's vannted Caribbe-an Basin Initiative.

In theory, the solution is obvious: a dismantling of protectionism. After all sugar is one of the few export-crops that some Third World countries can grow successfully. In practice, there are enormous problems in reducing agricultural protectionism in Europe and North America. Farm support given in the past has become capitalized into land values. Drastic reductions in support levels would impose severe asset losses on landholders. Important processing industries employing large numbers of people are dependent on the sugar crop.

Another alternative urged in a recent document ublished by the UN Food and Agriculture Organization is a new International Agreement "in which all participants recognize that the only way to achieve remunerative prices and maximize revenue is by limiting exports." But if this could be done it would have been done long ago. There are too many producers and too much self-discipline required for it to be possible.

Others argue that improvement in the sugar market will come about on its own because other countries are now unlikely to undertake major sugar investment programs. Because the EC and Brazil in particular are so well placed to respond quickly to any new surge in prices and increase their production fast, the temptation to take advantage of temporary boom conditions is now removed. But while some countries, such as Australia, can afford to swallow the demise of their sugar industry, others like Jamaica, Trinidad and Venezuela would find it painful.

Other industry experts believe new uses, in bio-technology for example, should be found for sugar. In the end the EC and the United States have to accept their share of the blame for creating the present havoc in the world's sugar market. No one expects them to unravel the situation overnight but some judicious reduction in the degree of protection given to home based farmers is absolutely sary. This is a crisis, and one Europe and America cannot shy away from

A little of Mr. Cutler's cool analysis could well be unlized in drawing opinions regarding both sides of the frightening situation in the Middle East. A flood of passionate anger is washing away the shreds of international law that remain in effect to protect the people of the world, and it would be extremely pertinent for the United States to clearly set forth the legal authority it had for intercepting it civilian sircraft over international waters. # Should Rock-Song Lyrics Be Sanitized?—Debate Goes Beyond the Words

by John Pareles

EW YORK - Lowell George of the 1970s rock band Little Feat was probably kidding when he sang

Some contend that rock and roll is bad for the body and bad for the soul, bad for the heart, bad for the mind. bad for the deaf and bad for the blind

Yet with an elaborate media campaign that culminated last month in a day of Senate hearings and stern, if vague, admonitions from Commerce Committee members to U.S. record companies, some parents have unset the record business

The Parents Music Resource Center (a Washington, D.C., organization that includes the wives of 10 senators, 6 congressmen and a cabinet secretary) and the national Parent-Teacher Association, with five million members, have demanded that pop record albums carry warnings about potenitally offensive song lyrics — preferably an "X" label. The parents' group has sponsored a touring slide show of excerpts from rock songs dubbed "The Filthy 15." The topics cited are sex, violence, the occurrent and encouragement of drug or alcohol use.

As of this writing, some major record companies had agreed to put warning labels on albums that included certain specific words — not the topic-by-topic warnings advocated by the national PTA or the broader ratings demanded by the parents' group. While representatives of the parents' group say they do not advocate censorship, many retailers have said they would not carry a record with an "X" rating. Through the years, however, many rock albums (such as Prince's "Dirty Mind," which has been cited by the parents' group) have been packaged with stickers noting that some listeners might find the content offensive. No matter how the battle over labeling is resolved, however, the issue is unlikely to disappear soon.

Why has the content of rock music come under fire in 1985, nearly 30 years after such Transa 🕷 eyebrow-raising songs as "Good Golly Miss Molly," and a year in which rock musicians have raised some $100 million for hunger relief? One reason is the current conservative political climate. Another is that the record business may feel particularly vulnerable even to implied congressional pressure, since the industry organization, the Recording Industry Association of America, has been lobbying for a tax on blank tape and tape recorders that would bring millions of dol-lars to copyright holders, notably record

A third - and major - catalyst is television. Music video clips have made rock performers widely visible as they brandish their pointed guitars, shake their fists and, sometimes, wear as little clothing as a Ziegfeld Follies girl. Studded leather outfits spiles haircuts, extreme makeup and the kind of hip-wiggling that got Elvis Presley censored on the Ed Sullivan show in the 1950s are accessible to every television watcher.

Madonna's come-hither glances and other 12.55 ..... KI E performers' rebellious styles may threaten some viewers every bit as much as motorcy-cle jackets or bikinis threatened their parents. But while video clips have helped spark the current debate, those clips (which are carefully reviewed by the stations that air them, and generally would qualify for a PG movie rating) are not at issue now — only

In the current battles, however, few of the disputants have limited their comments to the words on the records. Susan Baker of the Parents Music Resource Center (the wife of the secretary of the Treasury, James A. Baker 3d) has said that Madonna teaches young girls how to be "a porn queen in heat"; the group has also objected to a video clip of Twisted Sister's song "We're Not Gonna

Take It," in which a parent is thrown out a

A recent cover story in People massazine suggested a connection between the so-called "Night Stalker" murders in Los Angeles and the alleged perpetrator's fondness for the rock group AC-DC—a connection that the Los Angeles district attorney finds farfetched. Although Mrs. Baker believes that only 8 percent of all rock lyrics are offensive, parents who have been following the media coverage might well begin to worry that their childrens' record collections could incite them to frightening behavior.

The metoric should not obscure the lyrics themselves. An average rock song, particularly in the crude, heavy-metal rock most often cited by the parents' group, contains perhaps 250 or, for a particularly literary effort, 300 words. Since it's difficult to tell a story in 300 words (including a repeating chorus), rock songwriters inevitably pare down lyrics. Since most songwriters also want to reach the widest possible audience, they also make lyrics open-ended; if more people identify with a song, more people are likely to buy it. For similar commercial reasons, very few songs use outright profanity, since Federal Communications Commission guidelines prohibit the broadcast of some NLIKE movies, in which sexual and violent acts are seen directly on the screen, song lyrics don't necessarily deliver the same message to everyone who hears them. What wornes the record business and music fans, as well as defenders of First Amendment free speech guarantees, is that the meanings of songs are filled in by listeners, and a hostile listener can supply broad interpretations.

One excerpt the parents' group cites is from "Under the Blade" by Twisted Sister. Your arms are strapped

Your legs are ned You're going under the blade.

Does this signify violent sex, as members of the parents' group believe; is it about surgery, as its author, Dee Snider, says; or is it a Perils-of-Pauline scenario, sawmill whirring in the background? Is the Jacksons' "Torture," another song cited, sadomasochistic, or is it simply hyperbole, a metaphor for unrequited love?

The parents' group has also cited Bruce Springsteen's "I'm on Fire" as obscene. While "fire" is virtually the only four-letter word in the lyrics, it would be sophistry to suggest that the song is not about lust. It is also clear, from Springsteen's delivery, that the character in the song is utterly miserable about the state he's in. Even if the song were unequivocally, joyfully lusty, should all songs about lust bear warnings? Most of the example cited by the parents' group come from heavy-metal rock, a determinedly abrasive musical form consumed the few non-obscure groups cited are Motley Crue, whose song "Live Wire" on the album "Too Fast for Love" includes this verse: I'll either break her face

Or take down her legs Get my ways at will Go for the throat Never let loose Goin' in for the kill.

Six lines of a 38-line lyric, admittedly vulgar - but even execrable taste is protected by the First Amendment. That ugly verse should be put in context. Unlike the fully visualized violence of the movie "Rambo" or the television series "The A-Team," both of which have been seen by more people than were ever exposed to Moticy Crue, "Live Wire" doesn't involve threedimensional characters and doesn't last for very long. And while Rambo and the A-Team are presented as heroes, Motley Crue members dress like clowns. Heavy-metal bands are the bad boys of current rock; they package themselves as outlaws, not role

One argument made by the parents' group is that an album is marketed by a relatively tasteful single but also contains other, more offensive songs. There is, of course, a simple solution: Buy the single, not the album. Or avoid both. But that private choice would not affect whether a store stocks the record. A ratings label, which would taint the whole album for perhaps one verse of one song would warn that a song could be interpreted issue is truth in packaging.

In current rock, no one is selling Henry Miller in the guise of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." The kinds of style that alarm some parents signify clearly that a band as offensive; the parents' groups say that the plans to be openly rude.

What heavy-metal bands unabashedly deliver is shock value — a taste of noisy, anthority-threatening, vulgar thrills. They are an outlet for the feelings of rebellious adolescents. In that, they fulfill a function public bad taste — that has always been served by some kind of popular culture, from INCE the days of Plato, there have been arguments over whether art Should be disturbing; in the modern era, however, shocking art and cultural artifacts — Picasso's "Guernica," William Burroughs's "Naked Lunch," the Rolling Stones' "Gimme Shelter" — are facts of life. The Parents Music Resource Center itself knows the uses of shock value; a touring presentation called "The Clean 15" wouldn't make the evening news.

Rock, the parents' groups argue, reaches a young, impressionable audience. It is true that the 8 percent of lyrics that the parents' group considers dangerous are occasionally heard by children, in an information barrage that also includes television, radio, movies, newspapers, books, classes in school, conversations with friends, time with parents and, perhaps, religious instruction.

EW YORK - Sometimes conventional wisdom turns out not to be so wise, after all. Cliches codify what everyone knows, to the point of banality, but sometimes cliched assumptions become outmoded; they aren't even trivially true anymore.

Take the widespread notion that young instrumental virtuosos these days, while technically proficient, are bland, conservative and utterly lacking in individuality, "soul" or "heart."

This is an assumption with a curious combination of proponents. Older music teachers believe it, out of nostalgia for their own youth (although naturally they carefully exempt their own best students from the gener-

Record collectors and scholars with an nterest in Romantic performance practice believe it, clinging to their scratchy old disks. Lots of knowledgeable concertgoers and mu-sic-business professionals, dispirited from the general round of mechanically executed, calculatedly careerist concerts they encounter believe it.

Even some contemporary-music specialists believe it, arguing that young performers today are spiritually dead because of their lack of contact with their own time.

But what if this widely held thesis isn't valid? Or, more likely, that while it accurately described much of the previous generation, it is losing its aptress for the best young performers in their 20s and 30s who are now gaining favor with the musical public?

When the present-day concert scene is observed dispassionately, it would seem there is indeed a lively younger generation of instrumental soloists who evince ample heart, soul, personality, distinctiveness however you choose to describe those qualities that distinguish real artists from proficient also-rans. These young musicians bring to their playing a musicality that speaks directly from the emotions, conveying a humanistic sense of musical meaning beyond a merely proper rendition of the notes on the NCE one accepts the existence of this new breed of high-quality young in-strumentalists, then one is led to the reasons why they should have come on the scene just now, and why they might have been discouraged in the previous generation. And those reasons can possibly tell us some-thing interesting and important about the general climate of music in our time.

Some explanations and qualifications: There is no point in worrying overmuch about just who belongs within the magic circle of those dubbed "soulful" and those (young or old) who should still be branded as mechanistic. Here, just for argument's sake, is a short list, ranging among the pianists, from the Romantically communicative Radu Lupu to the willfully flamboyant Ivo Pogorelich to the introvertedly intense Youri Egorov to the coolly mystical, experimentally offbeat Peter Serkin to the manneristically swooning Keith Jarrett, who made his fame niche for himself as a classical pianist.

Among the young violinists there are Gidon Kremer, restlessly curious and imposingly musical; the wonderfully poetic Elmar Oliveira; the big-toned and exciting Kyung-Wha Chung; the still evolving, eagerly com-manding Nadia Salerno-Sonnenberg. There is the pre-eminent young cellist, Yo-Yo Ma, masterly in standard repertory and willing to branch out into the jazz-flavored compositions of Claude Bolling. There is the clarinetist Richard Stoltzman, who offends some purist technicians but who takes all sorts of invigorating risks with his art.

Anyone who thinks about these matters will and should question one or another name in this grouping, or challenge the shorthand description of some of the artists, or lobby fervently for the inclusion of others. No problem — this is a representative list, meant to suggest rather than define. The more worthy young musicians one can name who aren't on the list, the more strongly the generation of intrumentalists, and why, possibly, is that pall lifting in the 1980s? One explanation is a general condemna-tion of the modern age. "Students today are technically advanced; we live in the age of technology," says Rafael Bronstein, who teaches violin at the Manhattan School of Music and who counts Oliveira among his prize pupils. "But they lack a knowledge of the great composers, a deep understanding of past eras."

Bronstein's complaint is echoed by those who blame American conservatories in general and the dominant Juilliard School in particular for turning out uninteresting mu-sicians on an assembly-line basis. "I remember a teacher at Juilliard telling me proudly that Murray Perahia could never have made it past their entrance requirements," says Mark P. Malkovich 3d, general director of the Newport Music Festival and the Palm Beach Festival

The complaints against Juilliard and the other conservatories have partly to do with their pouring out of vast numbers of aspiring soloists into the marketplace, cluttering up the process by which the best rise to the top, and encouraging a narrow-minded concentration on "sure fire" repertory.

Today, the conservat take steps to counter their image as factories for spiritually limited musician-technicians. Joseph W. Polisi, the new president of Juilliard, has instituted course requirements to encourage a more humanistic education for young musicians. "We want to get them more interested in thinking about their mu-

Similarly, more and more competition losers, like Egorov, are coming to the fore, or pianists are making careers outside the com-petition circuit, like Serkin, or competitions themselves are being restructured with an eye toward avoiding their own worst excesses — as with Yehudi Menuhin's violin competition in Paris, which stresses all manner of repertory, and chamber and orchestral concerts, as well as the traditional 19th-century warhorses. Many of the older teachers represented an extension of European traditions, and especially Russian-Jewish traditions, into an

The Deal-Making TV Producer in the Baby Blue Rolls-Royce

ARIS — Judith De Paul likes pretty clothes and nice furnishings and admiring planates ings and admiring glances from men. She likes her new Rolls-Royce a lot —it is baby-blue and has a telephone — and what she really loves most of all is doing deals.

"I've been a television producer since 1978 and what you would call a deal-maker for the last three or four years, slowly getting a reputation as someone who can do deals, who is a good negotiator, a tough maverick." At the end of the sentence her eyes narrow slightly in a smile when you-say-that look, but she accompanies that with a hearty and lusty laugh. In her 40s, Judith De Paul is in the fast lane and is lapping it up.

De Paul, who was in Paris to start a deal with French TV, is a New Yorker who began as a child hoofer, was a soprano at the Metropolitan Opera from the age of 22 to 31, and then went into television production, winning two Emmies for "An Evening of Jerome Robbins Ballets" and "A Tribute to Toscanini," both in 1980. She came to London four years ago and 18 months ago formed her own company, Silver Chalice Productions. Her programs for the 1985-86 season are budgeted at $18 million and she just received a $15million revolving credit line from a City of London bank. She hopes Silver Chalice will go public within three years. Her six-hour mini-series, "Mountbatten: The Last Viceroy," will be aired in the United States on Mobil's Masterpiece Theatre starting in January. It is, she says, "quite lovely."

MARY BLUME

Coming up, with filming to start at the end of the year in India and Britain, is "India Gandhi," probably with Anne Bancroft in the title role. In the spring, filming will start on "The Scaled Train," the story of Lenin's return to Russia in 1917. Also this spring. De Paul plans to make a film about Klaus Barbie, the former German officer who is now awaiting trial for World War II crimes in France.

The Barbie story, De Paul says, will not depend on the outcome of the trial and even if Barbie, as so many people hope, dies before the trial, it will make no difference. The film is called "A Blind Eye to

"I'm very interested in some of the facts that have been unearthed about the late '40s and '50s and the Allies' strange involvement in protecting themselves against what they felt was a frightening new frontier, the Soviet blot. The way they went around protecting themselves I find rather abhorrent and he was smack in the middle of it, Barbie. That's what's so fascinating. The point is not to knock anybody, it's to try and be helpful and say, "Holy Christ, this is what happened, please dear God, let's never let it happen again!"

Judith De Paul

Judith De Paul made her first hig splash in England with 22 hours of televised Gilbert and Sollivan. Her gradual move from musical programs to controversial drama has coincided with her increased power in, as she puts it, doing deals. Two specific acts precipitated the transformation: attending such courses as "Theatrical Contracts" at the New School while a fledgling producer in New York, and reading a book called, "Winning Through Intimidation." It's a nice book, she says, despite the title. It's about a turtle.

"The turtle represented everyone and everyone's fears. Can I close the deal? Should I have my lawyer with me?" (Her lawyer was along for her meeting with French TV.) "Should I be bullish? Should I be soft? Should I try to smile? And he, this little turtle, went about all these various types of deals. Reading it as a very young woman, I started to laugh and say, 'I'm not the only one,' because this book is for men and I realized that men also worry about their ability to maneuver or manipulate the strategy within the deal in order to win

De Paul is a good-natured and kind employer to her mostly female staff of 15, who occupy a four-story town bouse in Mayfair. But she spends most of her time playing hardball with the guys: She is not ust another corporate woman trying to blend in with a gray-tailored suit (she wouldn't dream of wearing one, except to the bank) but one of that rare breed, a swashbuckling entrepreneur, eager to stand out in a crowd.

"We're talking about show biz, entrepreneurs and a macho approach in business. And perhaps what makes it a little unusual is that I'm a woman in that climate. I do have an entrepreneurial brain and it's a creative brain so that means I find deal-making very creative. So I can sit in a meeting and when it gets hot I can usually find another way to go around the deal. Or I can be tough and stonewall.

"It probably sounds aggressive, and I don't mean it to, but you must want to win. You must. You must be fearless. And you must have an unstoppable drive to close the deal, to be one of the boys, be one of the players. You have to learn about strategy. You have to learn how to communicate, you have to learn how to coordinate, you have to learn to read P-and-L statements. You've got to familiarize yourself with all the tactics and all the back-up that your opponents have, or your colleagues have."

OMING from a male tycoon, none of this would surprise.

Coming from a good-looking woman in a print dress and suede pumps, it often elicts shocked headlines simply because there aren't that many women in a postion to talk openly about power. Judith De Paul doesn't mind the boss lady image — it gets her publicity and throws male counterparts usefully off-balance. She is perfectly ready to disconcert if it gives her an advantage in a deal, just as she is willing to use footall metaphors in wheeling and dealing although she knows nothing about the game.

"It's good for the image," she says, laughing.
She is a workaholic. She wears on her right ring finger a knuckleduster star ruby that she bought in India while shooting "Mountbatten." It was during the shooting that she met Indira Gandhi, the subject of her next series.

rict of her next series.

"It's one of the most exciting projects I've ever worked on because it's what we're talking about — a woman in power. And it's a personal view, it shows how she changed from a loving wife who gave birth to two boys to a woman thrust in the political arena at the age of 48." The program will not take political sides. " It's very easy not to like a powerful woman," De Paul says. "You know there's the old saying, the man is forceful, the woman is a bitch."

Born in New York of Russian and Italian parents, De Paul made her dancing debut at the age of seven on the Ted Mack Amateur Hour, switched to singing at the School of Performing Arts (later immortalized in "Fame"), and was married for seven years to an Italian painter duing her stint at the Met ("He was wonderful, he taught me a lot about life and we're still good friends."). She gave up singing at 34 and turned to TV producing, starting with "Amahl and the Night Visitors" because the composer Gian Carlo Menotti was a friend glad to give her the rights. Successful as she was in New York, she decided that rather than be a little fish in a big pond she would rather be a big fish in London. She seems to have the best of both worlds because, although U.K.based, Silver Chalice represents such American companies as MTM (creators of "Lou Grant," "Hill Street Blues" and other hit series). and her own product is intended for U.S. consumption.

She notes that as a singer she was always close to her conductors, very charismatic men, very aggressive." When she started in TV, first in New York and then in London, she chose as partners men who were older, charismatic and aggressive. "And I found in producing I have become of a similar personality to these men, having nothing to do with femininity or sexuality. They were my role models. I didn't have a female role model."

Her handsome office is a study in the iconography of power, suggesting force, femininity, commerce and art. Dress is also important: since she is interested in power more than seduction, each garment has a symbolic role. "Sometimes I want a hard approach in a meeting, sometimes a soft approach." The real pros. she says, appreciate her style.

"The funny thing is, the City guys like me. The City guys are tough as nails and they are smart as whips and what they like is someone who's blunt, who cites the bottom line and believes totally in what they do. Because they consider that anyone who, to use an English term, waffles, who strays from the point, is not going to be able to make the mark.

She has made it. She likes the civilities of Europe though she misses what she calls the American cowboy instinct something I was trained to have and do have." Sensibly, she realizes it is best to exercise it in a climate where it is rare.

She has no plans yet to write an Iacocca-style book. "They're not ready for it." she says with her rich, operatic laugh. Like film mogul "I like living in a hotel, I almost always have. What a woman needs

Sam Spiegel she lives in an apartment in the Grosvenor House hotel. is to be on equal footing with a man and not to have to make the

Montenegro, Bad but Heroic

by David Binder

ROM pebbly shores to jagged ranks of mountains, Montenegro fills the eye at every azimuth --- some of its vistas almost frightening, such as the plunges of rockface beneath narrow serpentine roads or tornado-like waterspouts suddenly sweeping in from the Adriatic, Long considered one of the remote corners of Europe, it has lately become accessible with the completion a few years ago of the rail line to Belgrade and improvements at its airports. It is now possible to tour Monte-negro on asphalt roads, bob on a yacht in a snug harbor, arrive at an international air-port and never encounter the wild, the primitive or the perilous. But that could as well be a series of fortuitous moments, for this republic, one of six that make up Yugoslavia, retains the strangeness of a place that is too close to heaven and too close to hell.

Beyond the olive groves, the coves and the karstic crags lie legacies of tribal warfare, sheep rustling and bandits — the stuff of epic poetry.

The Black Mountains, so called from the 14th century when abundant firs held the heights in a hundred hues of darkness, were gradually denuded by a peasantry seeking firewood or clearing a piece of land to till. The darkness has been bleached white in myriad patches of exposed limestone rock white except when the sun dips behind the peaks into the burnished sea. Then in the night shadows the mountains put on their original coats of blackness.

There is something ominous about the land, as if too much blood had been spilled, too much destruction wrought to allow it to remain as peaceful as it seems. Slav against Turk, Turk against Venetian, Slav against Albanian. And, if the hand of man is not strong enough at the moment to spread ruination, then nature is a powerful proxy, as with the earthquake of 1979, cracking open ancient towns — Kotor, Budva, Bar, Ulcinj - like so many walnuts. Much of the damage to venerable buildings has yet to be Little wonder that Montenegro gave rise to the poetic inspiration of Petar Njegos, the 19th-century prince-bishop, who saw Satan and God as equals resembling Montenegrin clan chieftains in a titanic clash of evil versus good. Or that Milovan Djilas, Montenegro's most renowned 20th-century writer and a biographer of Njegos, should be the translator of Milton's "Paradise Lost."

"A bad land, but a heroic one," wrote Njegos. "Accursed but ours." In ancient times the Illyrians held sway. They were here when the Greeks sailed up from Corinth to build their trading colonies, on the coast as always. Illyria's Oneen Teuta waged a spirited defense against the spreading Roman empire. It took Rome's legions 200 years to subjugate the Illyrians and to establish the profitable province of Dioclea. Who was here first, who last? The proto-Yugoslavs appeared in the seventh century and formed their kingdom of Duklja in the 11th, centered in what is now the republican capital of Titograd. They warred with Byzantium, Bulgars and Normans. Out of that grew the Serbian dynasty, making Montenegro the uncle of today's Serbia. Montenegro is an anomalous combination of alpine heights and mountain meadows in the interior, a seacoast of infinite variety, of rushing streams and a piece of Skadar Lake, bordering on Albania. The coast remains largely Italo-Albanian, the mountains Slav. Scarcely 600,000 people occupy the 5,332 square miles (13,810 square kilometers).

Until 1912 a large chunk of Montenegro was jealously, bloodily possessed by the Turks, descendants of the 14th-century Mos-lem invaders who conscripted not only in-digenous Albanians but also Montenegrins as their converted proconsuls. So Montenegro's struggle for independence also became the fight of Christian Slavs against Moslemized Slavs - and anyone else who served under the flag bearing the crescent moon.

Montenegrins think big. On a pass across the Rumija range overlooking the Albanian border a youth offers a basket of blue muscael grapes for 100 dinars — less than a dollar. You explain that you can use only half a kilo - a pound. He looks at you as if you are an idiot and declines to do business with you. His minimum for sale remains two kilos.

And poor. Djilas recounts that he never wore undershorts until he entered high school "because of custom." Before World War II many Montenegrins were homespun, baked bread in ashes for lack of ovens and illuminated their homes with pitchpine torches. Trade was conducted by barter. Superstition was and is strong. Houses have spirits to guard them against witches, vampires, werewolves and bad spells.

We entered Montenegro on the coastal highway, the old post road, from Dubrovnik, down the valley of Sutorina. Soon came the first view of the deeply scalloped Bay of Kotor - four indentations dug into the mountainscape. Here in Herceg Novi the Montenegrin confusion begins. The town was founded 600 years ago by Tvrtko, the first Bosnian king, plainly a Slav. But it displays fortifications of Venetian, Turkish and Spanish design, a heritage of Mediterranean rivalries. It became part of Montenegro only in this century. The town of 12,000 meanders along the sharply sloping shore for An evening storm was blowing in from Africa and the high breakers splashed the promenade that curves along the bay be-neath paim trees. We found refuge in the modest and clean Hotel Topla lodged among pines and mimosa. Herceg Novi, the New Duchy as it was named when placed under the protection of the Holy Roman Empire, is a place of resplendent gardens and parks. In the almost tropical climate that prevails even in winter it is difficult to imagine there is skiing on the slopes of Subra, 10 miles to the north. Describing the climate, an acquaint-ance, Mama Beba, tells us with pride that Herceg Novi is "the rainiest spot in Europe." which may not be in the record books but with 333 inches a year could be close. Montenegro also boasts the most thunder.

NE could spend months exploring with their waterfalls spouting out of a cliffside a hundred feet above the road, their frescoed churches, their island convents and monasteries. We paused here and there, for instance in Risan, the last redoubt of the Illyrian Queen Teuta.

According to legend, she drowned herself in the bay rather than submit to the Romans in 228 B.C. Legend would also make her a pirate queen, the godmother of two millenia of Adriatic pirates, who had chains drawn across the Verige narrows to block access to the inner bays of Kotor. A ferry crosses here now, a distance of 900 feet. Few vestiges of the Illyrians remain, but Risan does have a fine Roman mosaic floor featuring garlanded Hypnos, the god of sleep.

On the next bend we paused again to gaze at the tiny twin islands, St. George (Sv. Djordje) and Madonna of Skrpjela, the former with the roins of a Benedictine monastery that inspired the German romantic Alfred Bocklin to paint his "Island of the Dead" and the latter still a site of pilgrim-

St. George has a burial ground for sailors and Perast, the town opposite on the shore, and Kotor were homes to famous seafarers. Russia's Peter the Great sent young men from his court to attend Perast's nava school, and it was a Perast commander who helped Peter defeat the Swedes in the Baltic, using harrying tactics that were the specialty of the Adriauc pirates.

Russophilia is among the carious tradi-tions of Montenegro. It began in the 18th century when Bishop Danilo Petrovic sought and received support in the common struggle against the Ottoman Turks. As a Russian ally, Montenegro declared war on Japan in 1905, and since this went unacknowledged it still considers itself in a state of war with the land of the rising sun.

The old coastal towns retain their markets particularly Stari (Old) Bar and Ulcini. The Bar market is just below the ruined battle-ments of the Roman (Illyrian) town of Anivari next to olive groves with tree trunks as thick as an elephant and as old as the Illynans themselves — perhaps 3,000 years.

In Ulcini we saw fleeting proof of the saying that "the sweat of a Montenegrin is the most expensive liquid in the world" - 4 Montenegrin was riding the family donkey to market, while his wife trotted behind carrying a huge bundle. It was a hint of heroic tradition (so called by the Montene grins) in which the male lazed about in the intervals of battles and the female did almost all the daily work. At Vladimir it was market day with Albanian women in print pantaloons, tightly woven striped aprons in orange and rec silver earnings, bangles, sequins, lipstick, powder, rouge, mascara, white or pastel green stockings and delicate slippers. The men, drab by comparison, wore dark double-breasted jackets and brown berets. The newly asphalted road wound ever higher up the 2,148-foot Rumija range, past the double-plowed no man's land outcroppings of the Albanian frontier. In the distance were a few spires of Shkoder, the northern Albaman metropolis once ruled as Skadar by Serbian despots and before that a powerful Illyrian fortress called Skodra.

Then the highway enters the clouds. Only now and then does Skadar Lake become visible. But for a moment we could gaze upon its western shore with its Byzantine island cloisters — Maraculk, Beska, Gorica — inhabited a thousands years ago by her-mit ascetics much like the Irish skelligs. No boats on the lake, which Yugoslavia shares with Albania. No tourists, just breathtaking vistas. Orchards of pomegranates, lemons and the odors of sage, rosemary and mush-

The mountain road twists, serpentines, such that even the curves have curves, with ver new glimpses of the biggest lake in the Balkans. The crump of heavy Albanian howitzers in practice maneuvers sounds across the water. In long loops we descend to Virpazar with inlets thick with water lilies, the home of cormorants, pelicans, ducks, her-

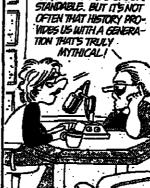

VEN with locally purchased maps the road to the Ostrog Monastery was somewhat hit or miss. The Balkan rule, even with good roads, is that any distance is twice as far as you are told. A native said the monastery was about 25 miles distant. Fifty miles up the valley of the Zeta a sign pointed eastward to Ostrog. Ever narrowing, the road curved up the side of the towering mountainside, past the cut of the Bar-Belgrade railway, then became hairping hending higher to the monastery. Hundreds bending higher to the monastery. Hundreds of feet above one could espy the white-washed outlines of the Ostrog chapel plastered onto the dark rockface like a block of ice cream: the home of St. Vasile (Basil); a 17th-century holy man who "had the power to shake and crush" Montenegro's enemics.

Five buses stood in a small clearing 200 feet below the white chapel, the drivers curs-ing, opening bottles of local Niksic beer with their teeth, while the passengers went on foot for the last portion of the pilgrimage. Some were blind, some lame, carrying votive can-dles and flasks to tap some of St. Vasile's spring water. At dusk vesper bells rang seven times, echoing down the long deep valley, and monks fragrant with meense commenced evensong for the pilgrims. Their numbers make clear that the shrines of Var.

EOFFREY LIPMAN, who has retion to start a new foundation on behalf of the International Airline Passengers Association, a worldwide frequent fliers organiza- facilities for handling it." tion, has no apparent difficulty in reconciling his previous role as a prime mover in the more experiments in tariffs — like British airlines' regulatory system to that of con- Caledonian's "Time-Flyer" fares, which Back when IATA regulated everything from seat pitch to sandwiches, that might have required some fancy dialectical footwork. But in the last half-dozen years, Lipman claims to have been a voice of liberal. ism, helping IATA to become a forum for USET-OTIENTED price discussions rather than price fixing, a realpolitik that has been fairly successful in the face of pressure from governments and the EC Commission for more competition.

Lipman doesn't see himself as a game-keeper turned poacher. "It's not as dramatic as that. What I'm going to have to do is look at everything that I've been doing from a different perspective, from a user's point of view, and ask, is that a valid activity? Twe never needed to ask that question in the 'past."

His objective is to exploit his insider's knowledge to "influence the decision-making wherever it may be, not just in the airlines, but at governmental level, with travel agents and airport authorities, so that they take more into account what resembles. think. There are possibilities for influencing the system that haven't been used before. I understand where these possibilities are."

Lipman, 41, has spent 19 years at IATA As executive director in the office of the director-general, he has had prime responsibility for political issues, the interaction of government regulations with airlines' commercial activities, and strategic planning. He will leave IATA shortly after its annual genexal meeting in Hamburg later this month to become executive director of IAPA's new foundation in Geneva.

IAPA, as an unabashedly profit-making organization, is possibly unique as a consumer advocacy group. It claims to have more than 100,000 members and makes its money by subscriptions linked to travelrelated insurance plans. Members are offered free luggage retrieval, lounges at a few airports, discounts on hotels, car rentals and other travel services. It is closely involved with airline safety issues.

A foundation is clearly defined under Swiss law. It must be non-profit-making be seen to operate in the public interest, not be a front for a business activity and must provide an annual report to the authorities. IAPA has guaranteed the existence of its foundation until the year 2000 with an annugrant "of at least 500,000" Swiss francs. Says Lipman, "IAPA is making a real commitment in setting up an autonomous organization that they can't totally control." Nevertheless, he is conscious of possible image problems. "The quality of our research is fundamental to whether we'll be seen as a subtle PR ploy of IAPA or as making a real contribution. The proof will be after a year when I know whether people are ignoring us or talking to us."

and services; preferences and travel trends, and passenger rights and obligations. He plans to develop positions derived from re-search among IAPA's membership, having first determined how representative this is of business travelers in various parts of the world. He hopes that ultimately third parties, such as airlines, might make research donations. "They might say, 'If you're going role," he says.

vary according to the time you fly - and frequent filer programs in Europe. He applands European airlines acceptance last month of fariff zones for discount fares (this sets minimum and maximum prices as currently applied on the North Atlantic and in accordance with the EC Commission's deregulation formula, Memorandum 2, and the recent initiative of the European Civil Aviation Conference). But he won't acknowledge that what's really needed is pricing flexibility on unrestricted full-economy and business-class fares.

Then there's "bumping," or denied boarding compensation. "Nobody outside the U.S. has come up with concrete proposals for giving a decent break to the public. Maybe overbooking is unavoidable, but air-lines should be able to manage their inventories better. They need to focus on what happens when you as an individual get caught in the situation," Lipman says.

Another issue is the bias of sirlines' computerized reservations systems, which typically favor their own services at the expense of competitors who may want access to them. (ÎATA is developing its own "Neutral Industry Booking System.") "But what I've scarcely heard discussed in industry circles, is the impact on the public." Lipman says.

"Anders Bjork, who is rapporteur of the European Parliment, had checked his own travel arrangements over the past year. He found that a third of his trips had been booked, not for his convenience, but for the person entrusted to look after them. The average consumer isn't aware of being a victim of this bias, of this game between the

How does Lipman intend to apply pressure on the regulatory establishment as a consumer advocate? "The best example I can give is the IATA traffic conferences which now allow for representations by dif-ferent interest groups. By knowing how the conferences work, which ones are going to make a decision and what are the key issues coming up, I think I'll be able to make presentations in an effective way."

For five years he has been involved in a fares and rates panel with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), "which not all that many people know about." He will also work closely with ECAC committees, where "there is scope for consumer Lipman has identified four main areas: opinions to be applied at government level" passenger safety, comfort and health; fares as well as with the EC Commission and the Lipman's plans have raised a few eye-brows in industry circles, especially at a critical juncture in the development of all EC air transport policy. But it's the timing that seems to excite him. "If this thing takes off, it will be a real challenge, and I can play a key

Restaurant Renaissance in Rouen

OUEN, France - Next to the sparking Norman magic of Deanville, Trouville, and Honflett, Rouen comes on a like a giant, groggy bear of a town, more an exit on the autoroute than a serious destination. · Until a few years ago, there were few gastronomic excuses to centure into town — the traditional haunts had that dull, boring eed of having seen and having served one tourist too many, and t looked as though Rouen would never pull out of the Norman rat of boudin and apples, cream sauce and calvados.

Now, wandering through the city's open-air markets and studies menus posted outside half-timbered houses, one senses that there is a small revival taking place. Rouen is displaying a new sense of pride. To go with it, the city now offers two extremely worthy restaurants, important enough to have you off the autoconte, even if only for a few hours.

One of a handful of young French chefs to watch today to Gilles Tournadre, a bright, conscientious man who was last seen at Normandy's lovely Château d'Audrieu, not far from Caen. A little more than a year ago, Tournadre moved off on his own, establishing the Restaurant Gill in the center of the city's charming maze of pedestrian streets, just steps from the grand 11th-century cathedral.

His small, ultra-contemporary dining room, decorated in shades of pale pink, blue and brown, has a smart and serious look, and service is cheery and professional.

Even a few months later, I can still see and taste every dish I sampled at Gill. When was the last time you tasted sole that actually had some character? Do you remember the last restaurant meal, or any meal for that matter, where every bite from start to finish, actually made you sit up and take notice?

Tournadre has a special gift, not only for making you aware of that sculptured leaf of mint resting atop the feuillantine de fraises, but for making sure the herb is so fresh your palate cannot fail to register the flavor. He can take the most mundane and set on a bed of dressed greens); the salade de languastines et of dishes - a panaché de poissons or a blanc manger - and transform them into gustatory symphonies.

What's best is that he does all this not with a larder of spices or seasonings, nor a bombardment of sauces, but, quite simply, with freshness. His panaché de poissons has an almost breathless visual beauty, a play of vibrant orange salmon, oyster-white lotte, alabaster sole and barbue, and glistening red rouget. The fish is so fresh, and treated with such respect, that each bite makes your palate tingle.

Even his platter of ravioli de langoustines - a dish made famous by Joël Robuchon of Paris's Jamin - was so exceptional you could forgive the chef for being a copycat. The giant ravioli are made of perfect pasta dough, filled with moist, cloudlike mouthfuls of langoustine.

We ordered the blanc manger almost as a challenge. If that classic nursery dessert could excite the palate, this chef would gain a convert. He did, Instead of a bland, faintly almond dessert with that unmistakable gelatin wobble, Tournadre offered one that captured the pure essence of almonds, marked with cream, dotted with strawberries, raspberries and red currants, and surrounded by a bright-flavored strawberry coulis.

NLY a few blocks away, hidden in one of the streets that fan out from the Place du Vieux-Marche, is Bertrand Warin, a tiny, elegant spot perfect for an extended Sunday lunch on your way back from a weekend in the country. Go with a lot of time on your hands, for although service is friendly and accomodating, it is slow. Of more than a dozen dishes sampled here recently, almost all were memorable, noticeable for their imagination and careful execution. Oversalting sadly marred a few dishes, and though Warin's cooking is less perfected than Tournadre's, he is another chef to add to your de mangue (a copious langoustine and mango salad served with a healthy dose of greens); and the enveloppe de saumon aux huitres (a lively marriage, consisting of warm oysters sandwiched between thick slices of fresh salmon). Both the courgettes en fleurs aux girolles (stuffed squash blossoms showered with fresh wild mushrooms) and noisettes d'agneau à l'estragon (lamb nuggets with tarragon sauce) were well executed, but salt, regrettably, dominated.

Desserts here are imaginative, and above average. The unusual beignets de melon - chunks of fresh melon dipped in batter and quickly fried - were remarkably light and not the least bit greasy, and the trois tartelettes offer a nice change from the classic fruit tart. Warin presents a trio of delicate raspberry. lemon and kiwi tarts, with a good shortcrust base. I'm not sure what he did with the kiwi, but it was the first time that the normally bland fruit did not make me say "So what?"

The setting here is gracious and harmonious, and there is no question that you are in Normandy. The carefully restored. cottage-like restaurant is reached through a courtyard, and the small dining room is attractively and simply adorned with wooden beams, mirrors and pleasant oil paintings, with the handful of tables looking out onto a bright, welcoming garden.

American context. Just as immigrant modernist composers shaped a generation of young American composers, so these instrumental teachers attempted to bend the American temperament — and the temperament of their many Oriental students, as well—to the styles they had grown up with. It didn't always quite "take."

Today, younger players seem to be working out a healthier synthesis of their own traditions and interests with those of their teachers — and perhaps the teachers now actively practicing are more willing to let their students express their individuality. "You have to believe and trust your own ears," says Yo-Yo Ma. "Tve defended my generation often with older musicians, like my teacher Leonard Rose. They passed on their traditions to us. But some traditions are not worth keeping, if they're just copies of habits. Every generation has to reexamine the values that come down to them."

Many of the older generation of teachers clung to the Romanticism of their teachers, and attempted to preserve its traditions in a modernist climate that was unsympathetic to excessive emotionality. Others were them-selves exponents of a hard-driving, austere, intense modernist style, the soloistic and chamber-music equivalent of Arturo Toscanim's intensity, which proved so influential in America especially, where Toscanini spent his last decades.

The great performers of this sort - Artur Schnabel, Rudolf Serkin; perhaps Alfred Brendel and Maurizio Pollini today --- have been full of personality, albeit a personality foreign to lovers of the Romantic style. But their students and admirers aped their aus-European Parliament's economic and social terity without being able to sustain their

Today's new individuality among the younger soloists, in turn, may be part of the broader post-modernist reaction, the swing of fashion away from modernism and toward a new expressivity in the arts. Oliveira's poeticism, Peter Serkin's mysticism, Pogore-lich's eccentricities, all may be the performance equivalents of the new Romanticism in composition, the fripperies of post-modemist architecture, the new Expressionism in painting. And if there is a parallel between newly expressive performance and newly ex-pressive composition, then perhaps young composers and performers can reforge their lost links, and mainstream performers can begin once again to define their styles in shared sympathy with the best young composers,

For Ma, the most interesting musicians of his own age are those who question the assumptions about career and repertory that others tried to impose upon them.

"What ties all these younger people together is that they care more about music than about their careers," Ma says. "If you do something really, really well, you are encouraged to market that skill. The people I find interesting are those who try to thwart that system. If you're only concerned with having big successes in every city, and play-ing 10 million concerts a year, you limit your areas of creativity. Musicians today are beginning to think in terms of long-range development, as opposed to the immediate benefits of short-term success."

But for the most part wineries in France, West Germany and Italy are not the tourist attractions U.S. wineries are. Turn up in Beaune, for example, in the Bordeaux is not much better and the distances between say, Saint-Emilion and Saint-Estèphe, can be daunting. Champagne is the easiest trip from Paris because it is so close — about 90 miles (145 kilometers) — firm you set out to visit. The organized trip is a way around most of these problems. Travel people and wine people have been getting together to run wine trips for years. Some of them are good, and some are not because, frankly, when you've seen one wine cellar, you've seen them all. That first day, when it dawns on the eager pilgrims that visiting old châteaus is succession of cold cellars — that can be a Now, however, a group of people here in Pans have come up with what seems like a good — though by no means cheap — wine trip idea, one that might just be the answer for those who want to see the wine country but not on their own. The group calls itself the French Wine Institute, which lends the proper academic note for what they propose to do: put on a two-week wine seminar in Paris with side trips to the wine country for hands-on or, more precisely, tongue-and-nose-on experience. The idea of combining a bit of classroom work with wine country travel is good because most people on wine tours really don't know much about wine except, of course, for that boring couple who asked questions about volatile acid and an-tagonized everyone the first day out. The groups are limited to 15. The cost is $4,300, double occupancy, and that includes the fare for the excursions from Paris (there is a $3,000 option for those who find their own lodgings). Everybody arrives on Saturday and is free until Sunday at 10:30 A.M. when the first session begins. It's a nice harmless lecture called "How to Understand and Enjoy Wine Tasting." Then there is a hinch and everyone is free until Monday, when there are two two-hour lectures, "The Structure of Dry White Wines" and "The Composition and Appreciation of Red Wine." Tuesday: same drill. The lectures are on describing wines and on tasting sweet white wines. All the lectures are accompanied by the appropriate wines.

N Wednesday, everyone is up and out at Orly Airport for an 8:35 flight to Bordeaux. This is a Saint-Emilion day, with visits to châteaus - Pavie, Figeac and La Conseillante. Dinner and lodging are at the Relais de Margaux in Margaux, about not just old silver and views of the park but a 35 miles from Saint-Emilion, but a good place. Thursday is in the Médoc, with visits to Châteaus Palmer, Pichon-Longueville, Cos d'Estournel and Léoville-Las-Cases Lunch is at Pichon-Longueville.

Friday, back in Paris, there is a lecture on white Burgundy. On Saturday there are two sessions, one on soil and climate and another on red Burgundy. Sunday is free and Mon-day everyone who has gotten this far takes the 8:05 A.M. high-speed train to Dijon.

There are visits in Morey-Saint-Denis and Volnay, a lunch in Beaune, overnight at Lameloise, the Michelin three-star restaurant-hotel in Chagny.

Then another day in Burgundy, doing white wines. A session on country wines back in Paris, then a day in Champagne Friday there is a blind tasting, a dinner at Taillevent and school is out. In all: 20 hours of lectures, 18 in Paris and 2 in Champagne; 3 field trips, to Burgundy, Bordeaux and Champagne; 9 lunches and 3 dinners that should be quite good, and all the handholding and tender loving care that people who spend $4,300 for a trip seem to expect.

There is also plenty of free time and,
unlike a lot of lock-step tourism, no pressure to eat too much. There are 11 unscheduled nights, and Paris has enough to fill them all. There are some 15,000 restaurants, and the French Wine Institute people promise to steet their guests — or students — to some

The French Wine Institute is run by both Frenchmen and Americans and is well connected in France. There is one seminar a month beginning Nov. 9. The address of the Institute is 76 Avenue des Champs-Elysées, 75008 Paris.

Just one thing: Besides sounding academic, the French Wine Institute also has a sturdy bureaucratic ring to it. But this is private enterprise in the best traditions of Socialist France and has nothing to do with the government. If you hit a corked Mouton-Rothschild along the way, you're on your

The preferred way to see the California wine country seems to be in what is known out there as a recreational vehicle, but that's another story. In Europe, the adventurous can rent a car,

Can a few rock songs overwhelm all that?

So far, there appears to be no reputable scientific evidence to support such fears. "Alot of people have studied rock lyrics," said Dr. Roger Desmond, a visiting fellow at the Yale department of psychology who specializes in children and the media, "and they haven't been able to find any effects at all—

Dow Hits 2d Straight Record

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed higher in heavy volume Thursday, and the Dow Jones industrial average set a record for the second consecutive day.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 0.79 to 1,369.29, a closing high, managing to hold the more than 17-point advance made Wednesday. The market was mixed for nearly the entire session. Profit-taking wiped out a brief midaf-ternoon rally, but in the last minutes of trading the Dow again moved into plus territory.

Among the 2,003 issues traded, advances outpaced declines by 813 to 723. Volume totaled 140.51 million shares — the heaviest trading day since Oct. 2 — compared with 117.36 million Wednesday.

Selling Luxury-Car Radios That Can Outsmart Thieves

By MARSHALL SCHUON New York Times Service

EW YORK - A new study by an insurance trade group shows that parts to reconstruct a 1985 U.S. sport coupe would cost three times the car's original price. That explains not only the high price of repairs but also the lure that has made auto theft the biggest property crime in the going to steal a radio the dashboard. The systems sold by Mer-cedes-Benz, BMW and Sasb if it won't work.' for their cars are similar, but they work in slightly different ways. Daimler-Benz AG of West Germany makes the Mercedes, Bayerische Motoren Werke AG of West Germany makes BMWs and Saab Scania AB of Sweden makes Saabs.

A.B. Shuman, a spokesman for Mercedes, said his company's new andio components are protected by a system that is armed when the driver's key locks the door. "When that happens," he said, "juice begins to trickle through a special circuit in the radio.

If the connection is broken, the microprocessor goes into a scramble mode and forgets everything it ever learned."

The next time the radio is hooked up, its display panel shows nothing but dashes. Restoration is accomplished by the dealer. and Mr. Shuman said that the repair system was highly confiden-

"We want to maintain security," he said, "so we aren't getting too specific. We want it known that the radios are in the cars, but not how they work. It's the old thing about progress. When you invent better armor, somebody else invents better armor-piercing

The BMW version, made by Alpine, was introduced earlier this year. If the radio is disconnected from the electrical current in any way, it must be reprogrammed. That is accomplished by punching a five-digit code into the radio with the station-selec-

Saab's system, which is new, goes the others one better and is more theft-proof, since the radio can be removed from the dashboard easily and carried away by the driver. The separate graphic equalizer, a part that tailors sound in seven bands of the audio spectrum, also can be removed, but with more difficulty.

A black rubber faceplate is provided to hide the equalizer from view. That way, both components need not be lugged into the house or locked in the trunk, and a thief will not mistake the dequalizer for a radio. A battery inside the radio allows the microprocessor to retain 18 preset stations in its memory for at Both radio and equalizer are removed with a pair of keys that unlock them from the dashboard. And the sequence for restoring them to sound health is similar to that of the BMW.

First, the part is returned to its slot in the dashboard. Next, the ignition must be turned on. The radio's power button is depressed one time, then the Dolby noise-reduction button is held in while a six-digit combination is punched in, using the station selectors. Without the proper combination, the radio emits constant and irritating beeps while the display flashes on and off.

When the 80-watt radio and tape deck are again working, they represent state-of-the art audio—and complication. There are 34 buttons to control the functions, but even that does not say it all, because many of the buttons work in separate modes to serve more than one purpose.

However good it is, though, and despite the fact that it will not (Continued on Page 15, Col. 4)

Profit Declines At BofA

Net Down 28.6% In 3d Quarter

Compiled by Our Stuff From Dispatches NEW YORK — BankAmerica Corp., the second-largest U.S. banking company, said Thursday that its third-quarter profit fell 28.6 percent despite a pretax gain of $310 million on the sale of its world headquarters property.

Most major U.S. banking com-panies have reported double-digit profit increases for the third quarter. Manufacturers Hanover Corp. and Bank of Boston Corp. reported an increase Thursday.

The San Francisco-based parent of Bank of America, the nation's largest bank, said its net income fell to $65 million, or 31 cents a share, in the July-September period from $91 million, or 47 cents a share, a year earlier.

For the first nine months, Bank-America reported a loss of $159 million, compared with net income of $302 million.

BankAmerica sold its world headquarters properties for $660 million in the third quarter. It deferred pretax gain of $237 million on the sale, which will be reflected earnings for 10 years. Samuel Armacost, president and chief executive, said, "We're seeing ongoing pressure in the foreign, shipping, commercial real estate and agricultural sectors of the Manufacturers Hanover, whose principal subsidiary is Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., reported that earnings in the third quarter totaled $100.5 million, a 13.4-percent increase from $88.6 million in the third quarter last year. Per-share earnings rose to $2.10, com-pared with $1.69 a year earlier.

For the first nine months, earnings totaled $299.1 million, compared with $246.3 million.

Bank of Boston Corp. reported third-quarter earnings of $46.5 million, an increase of 38 percent from the $33.7 million in the third quarter of 1984.

For nine months, earnings totaled $130 million, compared with $89.5 million. (AP, UPI)

Reagan's Nominations to the Fed

nomic Advisers, said that Mr. Johnson "is quiet and fairly effective," adding, "He doesn't come to a meeting with fire in his eyes."

By his own account, Mr. Johnson, the assistant secretary of the Treasury for economic policy, is a supply-side economist and, as such, is a member of a small, vociferous and often contentious school that captured the fancy of Ronald Reagan before the 1980 election and that has been a major influence on the course of the president's economic

Last week Mr. Reagan nominated Mr. Johnson and Wayne D. Angell, also thought to be a supply-sider, to the Federal Reserve Board. In joining two other members who hold similar views — the vice chairman, Preston Martin, and Martha R. Seger --the appointments could mark a watershed in the policies of the seven-member board.

The board and five presidents of the district Federal Reserve banks make up the Federal Open Market Committee, an enormously powerful institution that controls interest rates and the U.S. money supply. Mr. Johnson would assume the seat of Charles Partee (who leaves the Fed Jan. 31). Appointments to the Fed are for 14 years, except for the chairman, whose term is for four years.

Many economists fear a Fed that would abdicate control of the money supply and therefore of interest rates. According to the supply-side view, the Fed often controls interest rates and the money supply far too rigidly.

The new Fed appointments distress many con-

New York Times Service CHICAGO - The Federal Reserve Board is not bursting with farmers or small bankers. In Wayne D. Angell, who was nominated last week to be a member of the Federal Reserve Board, the central bank will now have someone with firsthand experi-ence in dealing with the consequences of Fed policy on both troubled areas.

By Steven Greenhouse

By Mr. Angell's reckoning, his correct interpre-tation of earlier Fed decisions enabled banks under his family's control to avoid the fate of many financial institutions that have lent heavily to the nation's farmers.

"In 1981 I became convinced that the monetary policy in place would cause the value of farm land to fall by 40 percent," the 55-year-old Kansan said. "None of the directors believed me except my brother, but they agreed that we would not lend more than 60 percent of the value of any piece on

Many of Mr. Angell's friends are hoping he will use his new position to go to bat for embattled rural America. But Mr. Angell takes a less parochial view of his new role.

"I don't believe that monetary policy should be rum solely for agriculture's interest or for commerce's interest or for industry's," he said in a telephone interview from his home in Ottawa, Kansas, where he lives with his wife and four children and teaches at Ottawa University, his alma mater. "I think each governor should have a responsibility to the entire country."

Mr. Angell showed his concern about the effects of monetary policy on farmers in a statement that he recently gave to Senator Robert J. Dole, the Kansas Republican who is his chief sponsor for the Fed seat. In the statement, Mr. Angell borrowed a novel idea from other economists and said the Federal Reserve Board should aim, as one of its priorities, to assure that a selected market basket (Continued on Page 15, Col. 6)

EC-U.S. Dispute

By Steven J. Dryden International Herald Tribune BRUSSELS - The European Community, responding to President Ronald Reagan's decision to contest EC support of wheat ex-ports, said Thursday that it will initiate a similar complaint about a U.S. subsidy program in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The dual complaints mark worsening trade relations between the United States and the 10-nation community, EC officials said. Distural trade policies and attempts to

Mr. Reagan asked Clayton K.
Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, to file a complaint with GATT about EC subsides of wheat ex-price policy conforming to its inter-national obligations." The new U.S. program to subsidize farm exports contradicted GATT's subsidy code, the statement said, and has caused a "drop in wheat prices on the world market which is detri-

But Critics Want Broader Changes

BRUSSELS - The Association of European Airlines called Thursday for limited liberalization of European air transport, where at the same time the benefits of interline cooperation would be maintained.

The proposals by the association, an umbrella group composed mostly of national air carriers, already have been criticized by some members seeking faster action to open up Europe's airlines to more competition and less regulation.

British Caledonian plans to withdraw from a committee that prepared the proposals on the grounds that they do not go far enough.

For the man with exceptional goals, a new dimension in private banking.

What makes TDB exceptional?
To start with, there is our traditional policy of concentrating on things we do unusually well. For example, foreign exchange, precious metals - and, very importantly, private banking.

Today, as part of American Express Bank Ltd., we offer you private banking with a totally new dimension. This includes access to the broad range of asset management services and global investment opportunities provided by the American Express family of companies. And for certain clients, we also offer such valuable "extras" as Gold Card® privileges and the exclusive Premier Services, state for round-the-clock personal and travel land. Or telephone: in Geneva. assistance.

While we move with the times, our traditional policies do not change. At the heart of our businessis the maintenance of a strong and diversified deposit base. Our portfolio of assets is also well-diversified. and it is a point of principle with us to keep a conservative ratio of capital to deposits and a high degree of liquidity - sensible strategies in these uncertain times.

British Telecom Plans to Trim 4,000 Jobs in '85

LONDON - A spokesman for British Telecommunications PLC said the company is plan-ning to cut 4,000 jobs this year from its 197,000-person local communications services divi-

The proposal was outlined in a confidential internal memo. which was reported in Thursday's editions of the Financial Times. The memo tells managers to "examine existing arrangements with unions, both local and national, and change practices which are no longer consistent with running the business excellently," the newspaper said.

The spokesman said that BT hoped to reduce its work force through attrition. The company has trimmed its work force by 15,000 jobs during the last three years to about 240,000.

Several dealers said that they believed the Federal Reserve twice sold small amounts of dollars for Deutsche marks and Japanese yen in New York trading.

There were reports that the Fed and the Bank of Japan were in the market throughout the day," said Daniel Holland, vice president of Discount Corp. of New York. "It's estimated that the Fed was in for $1 $3 billion.

"Without the intervention the dollar could have moved to at least 2.70 against the mark," he said. Dealers said the Fed intervened when the dollar was trading at 2.6520 DM. It fell to a day's low of 2.6390 DM, but reconped when, dealers said, the Fed again sold

Officials of the EC and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, holding their first meeting of economic ministers, said they agreed on a wide range of world economic issues, including the start of a new round of multilateral trade negotiations to promote freer and fairer trade. But they also identified barriers to increased European investment in ASEAN countries.

Tengku Razaleigh Hamzah the Malaysian minister who chairs the ASEAN side, said that these nations had reneged on pledges to roll back tariff and nontariff barriers to trade. Protectionism "continues to rear its ugly head in even more sophisticated forms, to...pre vent the sustained growth of the developing economies," he said.

DARLINGHISSIMA: Letters to a Friend

The letters are organized by decades and, along with Murray's commentary, show social history in close-up. Vacationing on Capri in 1952, Flanner goes to a party for Beatrice Lillie and is introduced to an outgoing and attractive young congressman on crutches, named John Kennedy. Laughing, his hair windblown, he tells her he'd met with an accident in Sicily, and presents the dark Sicilian girl who is traveling with him. Six years later, Janet — along with Katherine Anne Porter and Nadia Bou-By Janet Flanner. Edited and with commentary by Natalia Danesi Murray. 507 pages. $24.95.

Random House, 201 East 50th Street, New eing with him. Six years later, Janet — along with Katherine Anne Porter and Nadia Boulanger — receives an honorary degree from Smith College in a ceremony that includes "an impassioned speech for women's rights" by the same young man, now Massachusetts' junior senator. On Nov. 22, 1963, she writes: "About eight o'clock the phone rape of Jacobia Logaria. York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by John Malcolm Brinnin F OR 50 years, under the pseudonym Genet, Janet Flanner contributed installments of her "Letter from Paris" to The New Yorker magazine. For more than 30 of those years, another series of letters - more intimate and less concerned with appearances - went to Natalia Danesi Murray, the woman she loved. "Darlinghissima" she called Murray, and this record of what Murray terms their "passionate friendship" shows why.

Murray was 38 when she met Flanner, who was 10 years older. Both women were oncemarried, both engaged in public careers — Murray was a broadcaster conveying to her Italian countrymen under fascism a sense of "the American way of life, its spirit and its freedom." Flanner had chosen Paris and expa-triation over Indianapolis and the gentle ans-terities of her family's Quakerism. Murray had chosen New York and American citizenship over Mussolini's Rome and the state of being "Catholic, by tradition." Self-exiled by choice, cosmopolitan by nature, they adopted one another at once and for good.

In her first letter, written in 1944, Flanner chides herself for dealing with "tenuous mate-rial idiocies" rather than "items of deep consequence." In her final letter, written in 1975, she is troubled, equally, by the obscurities of Hen-ry James's "book on the Initiates" and Lanin's failure to provide "any new styles for tailored suits." First to last, her fleeting "material idiocies" give these letters a breeziness of address and unguarded feeling that nicely complement the more formal dispatches cabled from France to The New Yorker.

But even when she lets her hair down, Flanner's zeal to know, to understand and to communicate is apparent. Seldom have love letters contained so high a quotient of political discourse, or more confidently assumed that the beloved is as glad to hear the results of a debate in the Chamber of Deputies as to be told that she is "a woman in a million in mature elegance, charm and sensuality."

Vogey, a Petrograd artist—the one who did that Cubist drawing in the Shawns' flat, which I gave them—and heard Josette say. Kennedy shot. Oh, no. Not "dead" - it can't be true. Her list of acquaintances omits no one of any consequence anywhere; the number of those she counts as friends is almost as prodigious. In the security of her relationship with Boulanger, she comments freely on figures from both lists, and, with every opportunity to indulge in gossip for its own sake, never does. Her judgments of others are no more rigid than those she applies to herself. Falls from grace, however distressing, are all too human and explicable, and yet she can also call her own shots. "Take Tennessee. His imagination is a dire dramatic cesspool which fortunately spills onto the stage where it still shocks me, instead of into murders or destructions in bars or motels. But he is a real hater, seeing as an idealist (true? I wonder) only the hateful side of satisfaction." Along with Gertrude Stein, she dared to say of F. Scott Fitzerald: "My God, his superiority as an artist over Ernest Hemingway is incom-parable. Ernest was a recorder, Scott a novelist." Even her friend Leonard Bernstein did not escape her finely tuned ear and ready wit: "He st have had perhaps thirty or forty curtain calls. It was as extravagant as his programme, direction and also solo playing of concertos by Bach, Mozart, Ravel, then Gershwin's blues in which later he missed as many top notes as if he had been Rubinstein himself."

life and love, in a continued fury . . . of dis-

In the annals of American character, Janet-Flanner is both eponymous and unique - the com-bred woman of the world who meets that world on its terms and yet reserves for herself a degree of skepticism Europeans find congenial and a depth of idealism that baffles them. The balance is neither delicate nor achieved, but inherent. Flamer was a woman who could in the course of a morning write a brilliant encap-sulation of the political turnoils of the continent and, that afternoon, cross Paris to make sure that the lonely Alice B. Tokias, surrounded by millions of dollars worth of paintings she was too proud to sell, had enough coal for her grate, enough tea for her breakfast. She lived the life of her times to the full and was blessed with the taleat to record it with a breadth of vision encompassing the permanent without scanting the quotidian. The substance of these letters is the values she lived by.

Lasorda, his eyes rimmed with red and his head buried in his hands, received reporters in his office after first meeting there with team owner Peter O'Malley, who was accompanied by Mayor Tom On Niedenfuer's first pitch, a Bradley of Los Angeles.

"Tough, God, tough — just breaks my heart," said Lasorda, who softly uttered a curse. "It's the easiest thing in the

Two innings before, Niedenfuer had blazed a 2-and-2 fastball past Clark, then struck out the next batter, Andy Van Slyke. That had ended a three-run Cardinal rally punc-tuated by Willie McGee's two-run single off Orel Hershiser, the Dodger starter, and by Smith's tri-ple off Niedensuer that reached the right-field fence on one bounce.

Kansas City Laughs Last In Eliminating Toronto

By John Feinstein Washington Post Service

TORONTO - It was Frank White, the Royals' second baseman, who first uttered the unthinkable thought three days ago in Kansas City.

'We've never had a miracle here," he said. "Maybe this is the ago as a walkover for the buzzing Blue Jays, the Royals turned the seventh game of the American League Championship Series into a laugher of their own by shocking the Blue Jays, 6-2, before 32,084 spectators in Exhibition Stadium.

The victory earned the Royals their second American League pen-nant and made them the fifth team in baseball history to overcome a 3deficit in a postseason series.

The World Series will take place in the state of Missouri between the Royals and the St. Louis Cardinals. The teams from two cities at opposite ends of Interstate 70 will begin playing for the world championship Saturday in Kansas City.

The Royals had several heroes

Jim Sundberg, the catcher, drove in four runs, three with a sixth-inning triple that sent Dave Stieb, the losing pitcher, from the game. Pat Sheridan bunted his way on base to set up the game's first run and later homered Bret Saberhagen, the Royals' of an injured hand after three innings. But Charlie Leibrandt and Dan Quisenberry combined on a gritty relief performance that shut down the potent Blue Javs. The prevailing sentiment in Toronto on Wednesday was simple:

panic. Local newspapers were filled with quotes from fans talking about chokes and collapses. This was the showdown after more than seven months of work.

"These are the nights you play the game for," said Toronto's Al Oliver, who played in a seven-game World Series for Pittsburgh in 1971. "These are the games you

The first inning provided a won-derful chance for Toronto to regain men out. Saberhagen walked Rance Mulliniks on four pitches. Willie Upshaw then hit a one-hop shot to the box that smacked off Saberhagen's pitching hand.

The ball ricocheted away for a base hit as Saberhagen hopped around in pain. In Game 3, Suberhagen was hit on the leg with a shot by Lloyd Moseby. He stayed in the game and vielded a home run to the next batter, Mulliniks.

This time, after several warmup pitches. Saberhagen again stayed. On an 0-2 pitch to Oliver, the bali clearly got away from him, hitting the Toronto designated hitter on the ankle. That loaded the bases as the fans went into early delirium.

But Saberhagen hung in. He go George Bell to fly to right field and the Blue Jays, who had left 17 men on base in the previous two games. left three more.

They were even more unhappy in the second inning. With one out, Sheridan dragged a perfect bunt just past Stieb's lunge and well-shy of second baseman Damaso Garcia. He easily beat it for a surprise base hit. A slow ground ball to third by Steve Balboni moved him to second. That brought up Sundberg, who blooped a single to right that scored Sheridan for a 1-0 lead. In the third, Saberhagen, blowing on his hand between pitches, gave up a one-out double to Mulliniks. He again escaped the inning.

but not without controversy. The next hitter was Upshaw. who hit a high bouncer down the first base line. The ball took one bounce en route to first, hopped high on the artificial turf and came down just foul behind the bag. Dale Ford, an umpire, ruled that the ball had been fair when it crossed the base and called it a fair ball. Upshaw, who never had left the batter's box, was easily thrown out. He slammed his but to the ground in anger. Oliver then hit the first pitch to center for the last out.

Sheridan's home run in the fourth made it 2-0, but the game took a turn in the bottom of the inning. Saberhagen's hand had swelled and he could not grip the ball properly. Howser called for Leibrandt, a left-hander, who had pitched eight shutout innings three days ago.

Leibrandt got out of the fourth but had trouble in the fifth. Garcia led off with a clean single to right and Moseby grounded slowly to second, advancing Garcia. Garth lorg, the right-handed half of the Blue Jays' third base platoon, hit for Mulliniks and launched a drive toward the left field seats. But the wind, blowing left to right, kept the ball in the ballpark. Wilson caught it on the warning track.

That catch proved important because Uoshaw followed with a double down the right-field line. That scored Garcia to make it 2-1. Up came Cliff Johnson, 7-for-17 in the series, hitting for Oliver.

Leibrandt fell behind, 3-1. But he came back, striking Johnson out with an outside slider and a snapping curve hall that left the hig man reach the finals. # Right Man for the Role

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — When people Criticize President Reagan I say. "Name a movie actor you'd rather have in the White House than Ronald Reagan." Oh sure, somebody always says, "Jimmy Stewart — I think Jimmy Stewart would be a lot better president than Reagan." And that is so irrelevant.

Irrelevant because Jimmy Stewart would never have taken the job. Louis B. Mayer, the boss of MGM, knew this when he told the Warner Brothers at a sitdown in a neutral studio that "Jimmy would never accept the job because the country will always need him to lend a friendly hand to all presidents, re-gardless of party, when they mess up and to persuade them not to give up when the world situation

That assurance must have made the Warner Brothers breathe more easily, for hitherto secret studio uments now circulating in Beverly Hills reveal they had a candidate of their own. This was Allen Jenkins, a Warner Brothers character actor whose film roles, according to "Movie Trivia Mania" "generally fell into the half-witted criminal category."

When Louis B. Mayer questioned whether this was the image Hollywood wanted to put in the White House, the Warner Brothers noted that Jenkins also played mugs, policemen, cab drivers and bartenders, and was a good friend of Jimmy Cagney and Spencer Tra-cy. "Come off it, you guys!" Mayer is said to have yelled at the Warner Brothers. "We're talking about an actor who can go up against Frank-lin Roosevelt at the polls; Allen Jenkins couldn't beat Herbert

The upshot seems to have been a compromise under which Louis B. Mayer agreed to support the Warners in making Pat O'Brien the first movie actor president if the Warners would cast O'Brien in a few starring roles to display the quality of his presidential timber. The first of these vehicles was "China Clipper," made in 1936. I recently assembled a small group of persons who constantly carp at

When the lights went up again, they agreed they had been lucky to get Ronald Reagan for their first movie actor president. Life in the United States under a Pat O'Brien administration would have been

For one thing, in "China Clip-per" O'Brien never spoke to any-one but always barked, the way a quarterback barks signals to a football team. Say this for President Reagan: He never addresses the nation as if it were six tons of beef grunting over a pigskin.

Then there was old "Dad." You and I watching the movie can see that old "Dad" (Henry B. Walthall) is desperately sick and ought to be furloughed. Pat O'Brien could not see that. He drove old "Dad" to his death from overwork designing a wing to satisfy outrageously finicky government air-safety bureaucrats.

A man with the slightest knot of presidential timber would have put old "Dad" in a soft job requiring lots of slow travel in the coconut belt and got the finicky bureaucrats replaced by sensible bureaucrats who don't think it is the government's job to hamstring business.

The worst count against O'Brien as potential president of the United States, though, was his inability to surround himself with competent people. Skill at identifying quality help is essential to presidential success. Poor O'Brien's lack of it was ludicrously obvious.

Right under his nose, playing a medium-size supporting role, was Humphrey Bogart. Admittedly it was only 1936 and few people that year could have guessed how stun-ningly competent Bogart was. But then, in 1980, how many of us knew about Ed Meese? Ronald Reagan had the presidential knack of spotting the supporting player needed to do the job. Five years later, Warner Brothers gave O'Brien another shot at the big job by starring him in "Knute Rockne, All-American." Once again he barked tirelessly, this time about winning one for the Gipper. The man playing the Gipper didn't bark. The rest is Hollywood histo-

An international star since the late 1950s, Moreau is preparing for her Broadway debut in Ten-nessee Williams's "The Night of the Iguana," the first time she has acted on the stage in English. The play is scheduled to open Nov. 21 at the Virginia theater.

"It is a big responsibility and I cannot allow myself to be scared, to lose energy through fear," she said. "Fear is so bad. It confuses the mind. And these people need me to be clear-minded. Anyway, I have never thought of my life in terms of career. I've always thought of it in terms of experi-

Moreau is immaculately groomed, not a hair out of place, nails polished to a high gloss. The bruised sexiness she brought to such films as "The Bride Wore Black," "La Notte," "The Diary of a Chambermaid" and "Jules and Jim" is not so apparent now. At 57, she is less sultry than she is pretty, delicate, fastidious even. Everyone naturally assumes that she will be playing the role of Maxine, the flashy proprietress of a ramshackle Mexican resort in Williams' 1961 play. It was, after all, the role that Bette Davis created on Broadway — a brash, nymphomaniacal older woman who's it is a gift you give me to talk been around. "Ah, that may seem logical," Moreau says, "but one has to beware of logical things. Maxine is too American for me, too extroverted. I can be maybe an introverted American, but Maxine is a true Texas-American lady. The way strong American women move about, the way they express themselves, no, no, no, I cannot do that " Instead, she has taken the role of Hannah, the withdrawn Nantucket spinster, who stumbles into the tawdry inn with her 97-year-old grandfather in tow.

Hannah is much more mysterious," Moreau explains. "I know I can do it much better. People think because she is a spinster, she is a virgin. Well, maybe she is, maybe she isn't. To me, she is someone who has an instinctive drive toward a higher level of existence. She has great tolerance and she can see what is behind the surface of things. That is the part I have been living myself these last 10 years."

Moreau, it becomes quickly apparent, is given to waxing philo-sophical. She says things like "To be an actress is to be alive." Or: "An interview is not an interview; about myself." Or this: "We are made of all the people we've met and the relationships we've had with them.'

Ask her to talk about those who influenced her career. You might expect her to name François Truffaut or Luis Burnel or Orson Welles, who directed some of her best movies, or even Peter Brook, who staged the smoldering 1957 Paris production of "Cat on a Hot Tim Roof," which first brought her to the attention of the New

But no. "There was a lady, a widow, who worked very hard in this little village, who sometimes took me for the holidays," she says instead, looking as pensive as a Rodin statue. "She taught me a lot about being disciplined, about how important it is never to let yourself go, about how you must always behave as if all the eyes are upon you. I think it is important for a person to appear always at one's best. The way you present yourself has a lot to do with feeling clean and attractive inside."

Appearances (and philosophy) notwithstanding, Moreau is only half French. Her mother was an

World War II threw the family into disarray and her parents split up. By that time, however, Moreau had found her calling.

At 18, she auditioned for the Conservatoire d'Art Dramatique, was accepted and then, barely a year later, while still a student, was searched out by the Comedic Française to play a part in Turgenev's "A Month in the Country." She stayed with the company for four years, and finally asserted her independence "on the boule-vard," which is what the French call their commercial theater. When her costar in "The Dazzling Hour" fell ill two days before opening night, Moreau took over he part in addition to her own, playing both the wife and the mistress of the same man - a tour de force that now seems prophetic and symbolic.

But it was her passionate performance as Maggie, La Chatte, in "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" that opened the doors for her movie career. "All the young directors of the New Wave came to see me," she says. When Moreau was in India while back, serving on the jury of the New Delhi Film Festival, she met a Tibetan astrologist, who prescribed the three rings she's wearing. "He told me what stones I should have, how big they ought to be, whether they should be set in silver or gold, and which hand I must wear them on. It's supposed to keep balance and harmony inside the body and give you strength and energy."

The rings seem to be working. What Moreau radiates this morning is anything but buried pain and lingering hurt. She is swathed

PEOPLE Film on Mother Teresa

To Premiere at UN Hall The premiere of a film by the British director Richard Attenborough on the Nobel Peace Prize laureate Mother Teresa of Calcutta will be held in the United Nations General Assembly hall in New York on Oct. 26. It will be the first time a movie has been screened in the hall, a UN spokesman said. He said Mother Teresa had been invited to the premiere but did not know whether she will attend.

Former U.S. President Jimmy Carter and his wife, Rosalym, are in Nepal for a two-week trek through the Annapuma sanctuary, and the Mount Everest region Mick Jagger, lead singer of the Rolling Stones, is visiting India on a two-week, "intensely private" vacation.

Nancy Reagan, 64, underwent a colonoscopy, an examination to de-tect colon cancer, at the Bethesda Naval Hospital. An aide to the first lady described the procedure as "the final part" of a general physi-cal examination begun earlier at the White House, Mrs. Reagan was given "a ciean bill of health," said flaine Crispen, the first lady's press secretary. "She's just line."

Sylvester Stallone's two "Rambo" movies have taken the apple out of American apple pic., according to Literary Gazette, the Soviet magazine. "Sylvester Stallone is happy," it said in a dispatch from New York, "he has hit the buil's eye of the public mood." The magazine's correspondent attended one of the "Rambo" movies. "Each time Rambo killed another socalled red monster, the spectators jumped to their feet and raised the V for victory sign," he reported."
The hall was roaring "U.S.A.
